A Rare Late Seventeenth-Century Broadside on the Precedents for Parliamentary Divorce

1. [Broadside].
[Divorce].

Manners, John [1638-1711], Lord Roos.

The Case of My Lord Roos. [London: S.n., c. 1690].

12-1/2" x 9-3/4" (32 x 25.1 cm) broadside, single-column text in two parts, separated by rule, below headline (second part begins "Anno v. Edw. vj."), attractively matted and glazed in a modern frame. 20" x 16-1/4" (50 x 41.4 cm). Moderate toning, a few faint later pencil notes, small tears along horizontal fold, lower left edge excised without loss of text. Very good (not examined out of frame). $3,500.

* A rare ephemeral publication setting out two leading precedents for the dissolution of marriage by Act of Parliament on grounds of adultery. The first concerns John Manners (then Lord Roos), whose 1670 divorce established a model combining separation, bastardization of issue, and the right of remarriage. The second recounts the more protracted Tudor proceedings involving William Parr (1547-1552), including the subsequent reversal under Mary I of England.

Broadsides of this character functioned as vehicles of legal and political argument, distilling complex precedents into accessible form for circulation in support of pending or anticipated legislation. The present example is plausibly connected with the campaign surrounding the attempted divorce of Henry Howard, whose efforts in the 1690s and again in 1700 generated related printed advocacy.

 [Murder].
 Welch, Matthew.

An Account of the Cruel and Barbarous Murder of Mary Baker, Supposed by Matthew Welch, (With Whom She Lived in Adultery) In Drury-Lane, London, Early on Monday Morning, June 21 1813. Being an Awful Caution and Warning to All Whoremongers and Adulterers. Newcastle: Marshall, Printer, [1813].

11-1/2" x 6-3/4" (29 x 17.3 cm) broadside mounted to 13" x 10" (33 x 25.9 cm) backing sheet. Moderate toning, light foxing and soiling, small tear and a few tiny holes to broadside without loss to text, moderate toning and light foxing to backing sheet, which was removed from an album. Rare. $1,850.

Marriage, Adultery and Divorce, 1682-1891 • September 22, 2026

* A remarkably rare, luridly titled provincial broadside detailing a gruesome London murder. Mary Baker and Matthew Welch "cohabited as man and wife" in Drury Lane, despite both being married to other people. Following a violent domestic quarrel that required the landlord's intervention, Baker was discovered murdered, with "her brains beat out, several cuts on her head, and her breast black from the blows she had received." According to this account, the violence was triggered by jealousy, after Baker paid a visit to her actual husband, which "provoked the vengeance of her bloody paramour."

While Regency-era street literature and true-crime broadsides typically balanced moral instruction with cheap titillation, this Newcastle printing adopts an exceptionally strident, fire-and-brimstone tone. Rather than casting Baker purely as a victim, the text frames her horrific murder as a consequence of her own sins-calling it "not only...an awful judgment of God upon the guilty offenders, but also...a salutary caution and warning to others, that they may avoid the paths which inevitably lead to destruction."

3. [Divorce].

Crawford v. Crawford and Dilke.

The Crawford Divorce Case (Second Edition.) Containing Important Facts Disclosed Since the Trial. Illustrated with Portraits. London: F. Henning, 1886. [146] pp. Woodcut portrait frontispiece and a few small portrait vignettes. Octavo (7-1/4" x 4-3/4").

Recent stiff wrappers, edgeworn and lightly rubbed original pictorial front and rear wrappers laid down, loss to text of rear wrapper, which has a publisher advertisement, at upper and lower left corners. Light toning to interior, light foxing to margins in a few places, slight creasing to a few leaves, occasional underlining, brief notes to margins and manuscript page numbers in pencil, manuscript table of contents tipped onto inner rear wrapper. Rare. $250.

* Second edition. The Crawford divorce case concerned a series of affairs carried on by Sir Charles Dilke [1843-1911], an MP and prominent member of the Liberal Party. In addition to an affair with Ellen Smith, wife of a Liberal politician and the mother-in-law of Dilke's brother, he was accused of seducing Smith's nineteen-year-old daughter Virginia and continuing the affair after she was married. Virginia's husband, Donald Crawford, sued for divorce with Dilke as a party to the suit. This trial resulted in a decree nisi for the Crawfords but an unclear verdict on Dilke's responsibility for the affair. Dilke sought to reopen the case in order to clear his name, with devastating consequences—he was humiliated in court and the flood of subsequent accusations of adultery ended his political career. Our account, sympathetic to Dilke, appears to have gone through at least five editions with the fifth appearing in 1887.

OCLC and Library Hub locate 5 physical copies of all editions worldwide and no physical copies of the second edition; we located 1 at the University of Minnesota Law School.

* First edition. A controversial pamphlet dating from the early in the Caroline controversies and a fine review of the ongoing pamphlet war, which erupted after the Prince of Wales (the future George IV) had asked a commission to undertake what the DNB characterizes as "this 'delicate investigation'" of reports of Princess Caroline's infidelities.

The commissioners found no proof of adultery but did discover that she was lending aid and support to her husband's political opponents.

Did the Socialite Poison Her Husband?

5. Macdougall, Alexander William [1838-1916].

The Maybrick Case. A Treatise on the Facts of the Case, And of the Proceedings in Connection with the Charge, Trial, Conviction, And Present Imprisonment of Florence Elizabeth Maybrick. London: Baillière, Tindall and Cox, 1891. xii, 606 pp. Portrait frontispiece of Florence Maybrick, lithograph facsimiles of documents. Octavo (8-1/4" x 5-1/4"; 21.1 x 13.3 cm).

Publisher's red pebbled cloth, black-stamped title and frames to boards, gilt fillets and title to spine, colored endpapers. Light shelfwear and some rubbing to extremities, spine ends and corners bumped and lightly worn, rear hinge cracked (before rear endleaf), crack in text block before title page, frontispiece detached. Moderate toning, internally clean. A good copy. $250.

* First and only edition. Florence Elizabeth Maybrick [1862-1941], a American-born socialite, was convicted in 1889 of fatally poisoning her husband James Maybrick, a Liverpool cotton merchant with a history of drug abuse.

The book implicitly delves into the social prejudices surrounding the case. Florence Maybrick faced condemnation not only for allegedly poisoning her husband but also for committing adultery. Many felt that her conviction was fueled by Victorian double standards, where her moral reputation was used as evidence of murderous intent.

Despite scanty evidence pointing to her guilt and several procedural irregularities, she was sentenced to death. Public outrage led the Home Office to commute her sentence to life in prison. She was released 15 years later. The case attracted a great deal of attention and generated a large bibliography.

Macdougall, a Scottish barrister, provides a highly detailed, fact-based account of the investigation and trial while also examining broader issues of justice, gender, and the influence of public opinion.

"Public Whore"? Manuscript Defamation and Slander Complaint of William and Lona Smith v. James Acker in the Wisconsin Territory

6. [Manuscript]. [Wisconsin].

Single sheet, 12-1/2" x 7-3/4" (31.75 x 19.7 cm). Moderate toning, two horizontal fold lines, light edgewear. Content in neat hand, docketed on verso. Very good condition. $350.

* An original manuscript legal document from the Wisconsin territorial era detailing a high-stakes slander and defamation suit. Filed by attorney Dyer Read on behalf of plaintiffs William Smith and his wife, Lona, the complaint accuses local pioneer James Acker of executing a highly public insult. The filing charges that Acker, "falsely and maliciously charged the said Lona Smith... with being a public whore, and falsely and maliciously stated in the presence of a number of persons that the said Lona Smith was a public whore..."

Because the accusation publicly imputed the crime of adultery to a married woman, the plaintiffs demanded hefty damages of $1,000—an extraordinary sum for the frontier in 1845. The action was brought before Supreme Court Commissioner George Gale (1816-1868), a monumental figure in early Wisconsin history who later served in the State Senate, founded the town of Galesville, and established Gale College.

The defendant was almost certainly James C. "J.C." Acker (1819-1892), an early New York migrant who settled 160 acres in nearby La Fayette Township in 1842. While the ultimate legal disposition is unrecorded, this manuscript provides a vivid window into the policing of female chastity, frontier honor, and territorial jurisprudence just three years before Wisconsin achieved statehood.

Handwritten text on a piece of aged paper. The top section reads "M^{rs} Smith & wife" followed by "vs" and "James Acker". A horizontal line separates this from the text "Aff to hold to Bail". The bottom section, written in a different hand, reads "Filed Oct 28-1844" followed by "Leland Packard" and "Clerk" with a flourish.

First Edition of the Earliest English Treatise on Marriage Law With the Contemporary Signature of John Trumbull

7. [Marriage Law]. [Great Britain].

Baron and Feme: A Treatise of the Common Law Concerning Husbands and Wives... London: Printed by the Assigns of Richard and Edward Atkyns Esquires, for John Walthoe, And are to be Sold in his Shop in Vine-Court, Middle-Temple, 1700.

Octavo. (7" x 4-1/4"; 183 x 110 mm). [xxx], 380, [36] pp. Lacking the advertisement leaves (one facing title, four at end).

Contemporary sheep, sympathetically rebaked retaining original spine with raised bands and lettering-piece; boards with blind fillets. Moderate wear, corners rubbed; title and front free endpaper rehinged, small marginal repair to title. Moderate toning, occasional light damp-marking; a few minor marginal defects (including a small tear to L4).

Ownership inscription of John Trumbull, dated 1777, to title and following leaf. Housed in a quarter morocco clamshell case. A very good copy with notable early American legal provenance. $7,500.

* First edition of the earliest English treatise devoted exclusively to the law of husband and wife, and one of the principal early attempts to systematize the common-law doctrine of coverture in a single, practical work. Issued in expanded editions (1719, 1738), it remained a point of reference for eighteenth-century practitioners and compilers.

The treatise organizes the law of marriage as a coherent doctrinal field, proceeding from formation (solemnization and validity) through the incidents of coverture to dissolution and separation. Its treatment of the feme covert is comprehensive, addressing personal status, contractual incapacity, property rights, and procedural position. In contrast to earlier, more diffuse authorities, it offers a structured exposition designed for professional use, with attention to pleading, evidentiary questions, and precedent.

Of particular legal interest is its detailed account of the interaction between strict coverture doctrine and the equitable and customary devices that qualified it. The discussion of marriage settlements, trusts, and separate maintenance agreements documents the means by which property could be secured to or for the use of married women notwithstanding their formal incapacity at common law. In this respect the work is a key witness to the developing accommodation between common law and equity in the regulation of marital property.

The treatise also situates marriage within a wider legal framework, incorporating related topics such as bastardy and irregular unions, thereby reflecting the jurisdictional overlap between ecclesiastical, common-law, and equitable courts. Its scope and organization anticipate later eighteenth-century efforts to rationalize discrete areas of private law into systematic doctrinal categories.

The present copy's ownership by John Trumbull (1750-1831)-lawyer, State's Attorney for Hartford County, and later a judge of the Connecticut Supreme Court-illustrates the transatlantic reception of English matrimonial law. Works of this kind formed part of the working library of American practitioners, for whom the principles of coverture, as articulated here, remained authoritative well into the early national period.

A Rare 1796 "Crim. Con." Pamphlet: Homosexuality, Blackmail, and Collusion in the 1796 Valentia Adultery Trial

8. [Mountnorris, George Annesley, Earl of, (1769-1844), Plaintiff].

The Trial of John Belenden [sic] Gawler, Esq. for Adultery with Lady Valentia, (Sister to Lord Courtenay) in the Court of King's Bench, before Lord Kenyon, and a Special Jury, May 19, 1796. [London: Printed for T. Lewis, and J. Ridgway, 1796, but extracted from the J. Gill omnibus, 1799].

Octavo (8-1/2" x 5"; 21.6 x 12.7 cm). 16 pp. Later quarter white cloth over gray-blue boards. Moderate shelfwear to boards with some browning to wrappers. Uniform light toning, a crisp, well-margined, and textually complete copy.

This exact 16-page standalone setting of the Gawler trial is a notable bibliographic variant, structurally distinct from the standalone 19-page editions recorded in the ESTC (cf. ESTC T79806 and T4354).

These sheets comprise a distinct, self-contained textual section of the rare, irregularly paginated omnibus collection: A New Collection of Trials for Adultery: Or, General History of Modern Gallantry and Divorces... (London: Printed for the Proprietors, and sold by J. Gill, 1799). While the trial was initially litigated and printed in 1796, opportunistic booksellers like Gill acquired remainder sheets or actively compressed and reprinted successful "crim. con." (criminal conversation) pamphlets to bind them together under a new shared title page for a scandal-hungry public. This copy represents a cleanly extracted, textually complete example of that specific 16-page setting. $450.

* An important legal record documenting a high-society scandal from late 18th-century England involving a high-profile suit for Criminal Conversation ("Crim. Con."). The plaintiff, George Annesley (later Earl of Mountnorris), held the courtesy title Viscount Valentia at the time of the trial. The defendant, John Bellenden Gawler (1764-1842), was an army officer who later changed his name to John Bellenden Ker and became a celebrated botanist. The wife at the center of the dispute was Lady Valentia (née Lady Anne Courtenay), daughter of the 2nd Viscount Courtenay.

During this era, an aggrieved husband could sue his wife's lover for civil damages, legally treating the adultery as a trespass against his personal property. Presided over by Lord Chief Justice Kenyon, the special jury found Gawler guilty but awarded Lord Valentia only £2,000 of his original £10,000 claim. This drastically reduced award reflected widespread public and judicial suspicion that Valentia had actively condoned or orchestrated the affair.

The trial triggered massive aristocratic fallout. Lady Valentia counter-claimed that her husband was a promiscuous homosexual, and Gawler attempted to blackmail him to halt the legal actions. Though Valentia secured an ecclesiastical legal separation (divorce a mensa et thoro) in 1799, the House of Lords ultimately denied his petition for an absolute divorce due to heavy evidence of mutual collusion. Lady Valentia and Gawler subsequently lived together as lifelong partners, raising several children together.

Evils of the Divorce Court: First and Only Edition of Phillimore's Critique of the Historic 1857 Divorce Act

9. Phillimore, John George [1808-1865].

The Divorce Court, Its Evils and Remedy. London: William Henry Bond,

First and only edition. Octavo (8-1/4" x 5-1/4"). 34 pp. Disbound stab-stitched pamphlet. Moderate toning, tiny stain to foot of page 34, light soiling to exterior. Lacking upper-outside corner of title page, with no loss to text. A very good copy. $150.

* First and only edition of this scarce and trenchant critique of the Matrimonial Causes Act of 1857, authored by the noted jurist, legal historian, and Member of Parliament, John George Phillimore. Prior to the 1857 Act, obtaining a true divorce in Great Britain required a literal, prohibitively expensive Act of Parliament, effectively locking out all but the ultra-wealthy. The 1857 Act radically democratized and secularized the process by creating a new civil Divorce Court.

Phillimore, best remembered for his foundational work The Principles and Maxims of Jurisprudence (1856) and his mastery of Roman Law, launches a sophisticated philosophical assault on the new tribunal. Rather than relying on simple moral panic, he attacks the Act for its subversion of traditional ecclesiastical court jurisdictions and its disruption of historic canon and common law frameworks.

Furthermore, the tract shines a glaring light on the systemic gender inequality codified by the new law: while a husband could secure a divorce based solely on his wife's adultery, a wife was forced to prove "aggravated adultery," or infidelity compounded by legally defined cruelty, desertion, incest, or bigamy. A vital, primary-source window into the fierce institutional anxieties of Victorian family law reform.

A Scarce 1816 Adultery Trial Sensation

11. Phillips, Charles.

The Most Eloquent Speech, At Length, Of Mr. Phillips, In the Court of Common Pleas, Dublin, In the Case of Guthrie v. Sterne, For Adultery. With the Author's Last Corrections: Not a Single Word Omitted.

London: Printed for W. Hone, 1816.

Thirteenth stated edition. Octavo (8-1/2" x 5"). 16 pp. Stab-stitched pamphlet bound in modern cloth, lettering piece and gilt date to spine. Boards lightly bowed, light rubbing to extremities. Bookplate (of Geoffrey G. Briggs) and small bookseller's ticket to front pastedown. Light toning to interior, crack in text block after title page, light soiling in a few places, faint dampstain to top of first five leaves. A very good copy. $450.

* The trial of Guthrie v. Sterne was one of the early 19th century's most sensational actions for "criminal conversation" (crim. con.), a common-law tort that allowed a husband to sue another man for damages resulting from adultery. Utilizing a masterful blend of Romantic sensibility and high-stakes theatrical rhetoric, preeminent Anglo-Irish barrister Charles Phillips [1787-1859] painted a devastating portrait of broken domestic bliss. His speech captivated the jury and successfully secured a staggering £5,000 judgment for his client, John Guthrie.

This edition is historically noteworthy for its radical publisher, William Hone, who regularly weaponized high-society sex scandals to critique upper-class morality and profit from the public's appetite for legal melodrama.

This copy belonged to the distinguished legal library of Sir Geoffrey Briggs [1914-1993], the eminent English jurist who served as Chief Justice of Hong Kong and Brunei.

A Scarce 1817 Edition of Phillips' Sensational Seduction Speech
"Is There a Punishment Too Severe for Such Depravity?"

12. Phillips, Charles [1787?-1859].

Seduction!!! The Eloquent Speech of Mr. Phillips, Of the Irish Bar, In the Case of Creighton v. Townsend, For Seduction. London: Published by J. Johnston, [1817?].

First Johnston edition. Octavo (8-1/4" x 5-1/4"; 21 x 13.3cm). 20 pp. Disbound stab-stitched pamphlet. Light toning, slight crack in text block between pages 12 and 13, all leaves secure. Small recent ink annotation and initials to pages [2] and 20. A very good copy. SOLD.

* The sensational case of Creighton v. Townsend centered on the seduction of Catherine Creighton, the sixteen-year-old daughter of a Dublin slate merchant, by a British military officer, Lieutenant Henry Dive Townsend. Because women lacked independent legal standing in such torts, her father brought a civil suit for loss of service. Phillips, serving as lead counsel for the plaintiff, delivered a blistering opening statement that captivated the public and ultimately secured a substantial £750 verdict for the family.

Phillips was an Irish barrister notable for his courtroom oratory. He argued many prominent cases, primarily adultery and seduction trials. The speech stands as a prime example of the theatrical "Hibernian oratory" that dominated Regency-era legal culture. While competing London editions were rushed to print by William Hone and Richard Fairburn to satisfy public demand for the scandal.

* A scarce, highly polemical work published during a period of intense public anxiety over high-profile aristocratic divorce cases (such as the notorious Grosvenor case of 1770). Writing in defense of the failed Marital Restraints Bill of 1771, which sought to legally ban divorced, adulterous parties from marrying their lovers, Pollen argues that the strict subjugation of women to their husbands is vital to the role of government as a preserver of social mores.

Pollen was an Oxford-educated cleric who served from 1754 to 1760 as the missionary rector of Trinity Church in Newport, Rhode Island, under the auspices of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts (SPG). A prominent colonial intellectual, he famously collaborated directly with Benjamin Franklin on a plan to establish a local school for free and enslaved Black children.

This 1772 printing represents the definitive, sole edition of the text; no subsequent reprints were ever published. General trade distribution was handled by John Oliver (c. 1702-1775), official printer to the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge (SPCK).

14. A Student of the Inner-Temple.

[Noble, Richard (1684-1713)].

The Case of Mr. Richard Noble Impartially Consider'd: Abstractly from the Man, Or Crime, But Meerly as to the Law, In Relation to the Motion by Him Made, On Monday the Sixteenth Day of March, 1712, At Kingston Assizes, In Arrest of Judgment: And the Reason Given for Over-ruling the Same Confuted. By a Student of the Inner-Temple.

London: Printed, and are to be Sold by J. Morphew, and Jer. Milner, 1713.

First and only edition. Folio (12-1/4" x 7-3/4"; 30.7 x 20 cm). [ii], 9, [1] pp. Disbound pamphlet, edges untrimmed. Moderate toning, some inkstains to title page and doodles to final (blank) page, light foxing and soiling to margins, loss of text at gutter of page 9 due to binding error. Overall, a very good copy. $250.

* A rare legal tract focusing on one of the early 18th century's most scandalous capital murder cases involving adultery and "criminal conversation". John and Mary Sayer suffered a notoriously unhappy marriage; Mrs. Sayer eventually retained the legal services of Richard Noble to secure a separation, which quickly dissolved into an open romantic affair and flight together in 1712.

Mr. Sayer retaliated by suing Noble for criminal conversation and securing a warrant for his wife's arrest. Backed by two constables and several assistants, Sayer raided the house in The Mint where Noble was staying with Mrs. Sayer and her mother. Upon entry, Noble drew his sword and fatally stabbed Sayer.

While the public voraciously consumed sensationalized accounts of the "intrigue," this specific pamphlet, penned anonymously by a member of the Inner Temple, offers a rigorous, professional dissection of the technical legal defense. It evaluates Noble's failed motion in Arrest of Judgment at the Kingston Assizes and examines whether the forced entry by the husband constituted an unconstitutional breach of domicile or justification for self-defense. Noble was executed on March 28, 1713, while his co-defendants were acquitted.

A very good copy of a landmark work. $3,500.

* First edition. Swinburne's Treatise of Spousals is the first English legal treatise dedicated to matrimonial contracts and a primary milestone in the legal history of women. Written by a Judge of the Consistory Court at York, the work provides a definitive 17th-century resolution to the complexities of betrothals vs. marriage, dissolution and divorce, and the rights of women.

This copy features the signature of Julius Rosenthal (1828-1905), the legendary librarian of the Chicago Law Institute and a titan of the 19th-century American bar.

Although written decades before its 1686 publication, Swinburne's "Spousals" remained the undisputed authority on the subject for over a century. This copy, with its connection to one of America's great legal bibliophiles, is a premier acquisition for any collection of Anglo-American jurisprudence.

Octavo (7-3/4" x 4-3/4"). xii, 36 pp.

Stab-stitched pamphlet, disbound and resewn. Light toning, light soiling to exterior and a few other pages, small inkspots to fore-edge, light foxing in a few places. $500.

* Only London edition, reprinted from the first Dublin edition. Westmeath, an Irish peer, sought £20,000 in damages after he caught his wife Maryanne carrying on an affair with Bradshaw during a period of separation. The jury awarded him £10,000, though Bradshaw's relative poverty made the damages difficult to recover. The Westmeaths later divorced and Bradshaw and Maryanne married in 1796. An interesting feature of this account is the extensive editor's preface, addressed "to the Right Honourable, Right Fashionable, Truly Liberal, and Uncontroulable Amateurs of the Haut Ton." It discusses, among other topics, Irish assimilation into English culture and high society and the subsequent loosening of Irish morals.

MUNICIPAL COURT.

Monday, March 24.

At a quarter to 10 A. M., the north doors of the Court room were opened, and the space outside of the bar together with the gallery, was immediately filled with a crowd of eager spectators, who paid but little deference to order in gaining their entrance. The South doors continued closed, except for the admission of jurors, witnesses and officers of the Court. The area within the counsellors' bar, was seated to its utmost capacity by the excellent arrangement of the Sheriff; and sometime before proceedings commenced every portion of the Court room was filled to overflowing.

The following named gentlemen were empanelled to compose the jury:

Tisdale Drake, foreman; Benj. M. Ackerman, Thos. C. Baldwin, Joseph J. Bigelow Geo. W. Bond, Henry R. Cazneau, David J. Collier, James W. Converse, Chas. S. Ellis, John P. Fairbanks, Christopher C. Gore, Samuel Vaughan.

Each juror was interrogated as to his relation or interest in the trial, and if he entertained any bias or prejudice, or had expressed any opinion relative to the case. Several were set aside in consequence.

Ex-Judge WARREN and JOHN A. BOLLES, Esq. appeared as counsel for the defence.

The indictment against the prisoner was read, and set forth that on the 19th of Dec 1841, he committed the crime of adultery with Miss Rhoda Davidson.

MR PARKER'S OPENING ADDRESS.

In the progress of the trials at this term, gentlemen of the jury, we have now arrived at a prosecution of no ordinary importance. It derives its interest from the heinousness of the crime charged, and the previous respectability of the person accused. Indictments of this character are not indeed of unfrequent occurrence, as the records of this Court, and the printed decisions of the Supreme Court, attest; and in most of the recent prosecutions for this offence in this Court, the parties accused have pleaded guilty, and either forfeited the penalty of their recognizances, or quietly submitted to the punishment of the law. But we are now assembled for the solemn trial of an issue, in which the accused denies his guilt; and we are to proceed through a most painful investigation, deeply affecting from many circumstances, all who are to be engaged in it, and involving under all circumstances, some of the most important interests of society.

It is my duty in opening the case, to state the law to you, and give you a brief outline of the evidence to be introduced.

The first section of the 130th chapter of the Revised Statutes, you perceive that tho' the punishment is prescribed, the crime itself is not defined; and it is a remarkable circumstance that it is very difficult, if not impossible, to find in the law books an exact common law definition of Adultery. As to most offences the defects of the statute law are remedied by a recurrence to the common law, which our progenitors brought with them to America, and are continued in force by the sixth chapter of our State Constitution; but as to the crime of adultery, this remedy fails, for, for some centuries, it has not been an offence recognized by the temporal courts of the common law of England, and is not indictable there. (See Selkeld's reports, 552.) In very ancient times it was punished by special statutes in the temporal courts, but latterly (since the statute of 13, Edward the first, of circumspecte agatis) only in the courts christian (the ecclesiastical courts) by penance pro salute animae, perpetual exile, or perpetual imprisonment. (See Gibson's Codez, 1085.)

The name of the offence is said to be an abridgement of Ad a'thorum thorum, though some lawyers derive it from adulterating the issue of the marriage bed, an opinion that derives countenance from the fact that an unmarried woman cannot commit the crime. It is an offence which seems to have been well understood without a studied definition; it is

He "Argued Much from the Bible to Induce Me to Submit to His Base Designs"

17. [Trial].

Fairchild, Joy Hamlet [1790-1859], Defendant.

[A Full and Accurate Report of the Trial of Rev. Joy H. Fairchild, Before the Municipal Court of Boston, For Adultery with Miss Rhoda Davidson]. Caption title: Mr. Fairchild's Trial. [Boston: H.B. Skinner, 1845].

Octavo (10" x 6"; 25 x 15 cm). 24 pp. Text in parallel columns. Stab-stitched pamphlet with untrimmed edges. Moderate toning, occasional light foxing. Lower outside corners of last two leaves lacking, with minor loss to text on last leaf. $250.

* A scarce antebellum legal document of the highly publicized Boston municipal trial of the Reverend Joy Hamlet Fairchild, a married Orthodox Congregational minister accused of committing adultery with Rhoda Davidson, a young domestic servant of Edgecomb, Maine, living in his household. After Davidson gave birth to a child and named Fairchild as the father, the ensuing scandal captivated the New England public, exposing deep anxieties surrounding ministerial morality and the sexual exploitation of working-class women.

One of several publications about this celebrated, notorious case. Fairchild vigorously defended himself against the adultery charge, claiming he was the victim of a malicious conspiracy engineered by rival clergymen intent on framing him as a habitual libertine. This Skinner printing captures the full dramatic tension of the courtroom, including Davidson's detailed testimony regarding how Fairchild used perverted biblical arguments to overcome her moral objections: "I asked him if God had not declared that every man should have his own wife, and none other. He said that was Paul's language, and then argued much from the Bible to induce me to submit to his base designs, which he succeeded in accomplishing."

It closes with the equally vexing verdicts. Despite his conviction in ecclesiastical court, the Boston municipal jury found that he was not guilty of adultery. The trial highlights a fascinating divergence in nineteenth-century American jurisprudence. A compelling artifact documenting the intersection of religion, law, and public obsession with sexual scandal in New England.

As in most other copies we located, ours is lacking its wrappers, which contained the title and publication information. Accounts of this case are scarce. OCLC locates 5 copies of the present title (American Antiquarian Society, Harvard Law School, Cornell University, University of Chicago, Yale Law School). A "Penurious Old Reptile" on Trial:
The 1757 Adultery Trial of Captain James Gambier

19. [Trial].

Gambier, James, Defendant [1723-1789].

The Proceedings on the Trial of Captain G-----, Late of His Majesty's Ship the Severn, On an Action on the Case Wherein the Damages Sued for was 10,000 l. for Crim. Con. With Ad----l K-----s's Lady; Which was Tried in the Court of King's Bench at Guildhall, By a Special Jury, On Saturday the Eleventh Day of June, 1757. When One Thousand Pounds Damages were Given to the Plaintiff. With an Introductory Preface. London: Printed for H. Owen, At the Britannia Printing-Office, White-Friers, 1757.

First edition. Octavo (8" x 4-1/2"; 20.3 x 11.4cm). vii, 3-56 pp. Stab-stitched pamphlet in later plain wrappers, typed label with title and date to front wrapper. Light soiling and creasing to wrappers. Light toning to interior, occasional light foxing, light soiling and tiny wear holes in a few places. Crease and a few small holes to foot of title page without loss to legibility. Minor edgewear and localized short tears along the fore-edges of a few leaves. A few small thin spots to page 35 and leaf E4 (pages 33-34), which is separating at foot but secure. A very good copy. $250.

* One of four London issues variant imprints from 1757. This scarce pamphlet details a scandalous 18th-century "Criminal Conversation" (crim. con.) action-the legal precursor to civil damages for adultery. The plaintiff, Admiral Sir Charles Knowles, accused Captain James Gambier of an affair with his second wife, Maria de Bouget [1733-1796].

The trial serves as a fascinating lens into the social dynamics, naval politics, and public consumption of celebrity scandal in Georgian England. Gambier was notoriously unpopular among his crew; one of his own men famously described him as a "penurious old reptile" (Oxford Dictionary of National Biography). This deep lack of personal popularity appears to have spilled over into the courtroom. Failing to win the sympathy of the special jury, Gambier was ordered to pay a hefty fine of £1,000 to the plaintiff-a significant sum for the era, though far short of the original £10,000 demanded.

A Raucous Divorce Case: Only Edition of the 1880 Newman Hall Divorce Case Report

20. [Trial].

Hall v. Hall.

The Full Report of the Newman Hall Divorce Case [Drop-Head Title]. At head of drop-head title: Police News Edition. London: G. Purkess, [c.1880]. 16 pp. Title page has large woodcut portraits of the Halls. Octavo (8-1/4" x 5-1/4").

Stab-stitched pamphlet, thread lacking. Moderate toning, light edgewear and chipping to spine, light foxing to final few leaves, title page affected by trimming to top and fore-edges without loss to legibility. Rare. $850.

* Only edition. In 1880, Christopher Newman Hall, a minister who had gained fame in Britain and the United States with his tract Come to Jesus (1848), accused his wife Charlotte of adultery with a friend of the couple. She denied the accusations and accused him of infidelity in turn. The couple was not particularly compatible; Charlotte was a free spirit who loved to hunt and smoke, habits her husband despised on moral grounds. Newman Hall's high profile and the humor of much of the testimony made the trial a raucous affair, with frequent bursts of laughter from witnesses to the despair of the judge. Newman Hall ultimately succeeded in obtaining a decree nisi and remarried later that year.

Report of the Trial of Joseph Henry, Esq., In the Sheriff's Court, On Friday, Jan. 20, 1809, For Criminal Conversation with Lady Emily Best. London: Printed by B. McMillan, 1809.

* A scarce report of an inquiry to award damages after Lady Emily Best deserted her formerly wealthy husband (who was then confined to a debtor's prison) and her infant daughter to cohabit with the defendant. Because the plaintiff in this case was heavily indebted and imprisoned, the sensational trial highlights early 19th-century British societal tensions surrounding class, marriage laws, and economic ruin. The Renier Copy of an Unrecorded 1808 "Crim. Con." Trial Pamphlet:

22. [Trial].

Crim. Con. Between a Lawyer's Clerk and His Mistress. Fairburn's Edition of the Trial Between Joseph Fowler, An Attorney, And Chas. Hodgson, His Clerk, For Criminal Conversation with the Plaintiff's Wife, Which was Tried at the Court of Common Pleas, Before Lord Chief Justice Mansfield, And a Special Jury, July 13, 1808. Taken in Short Hand. Embellished with an Engraved Frontispiece, Representing "Her Dear Charles" Putting Her Ear-rings in Her Ears.

London: Published by John Fairburn, [1808].

First and only edition. Octavo (8-1/4" x 5"; 21 x 12.7 cm). 17, [1] pp. Folding frontispiece. Disbound stab-stitched pamphlet housed in recent card folder with annotations to front. Moderate toning, somewhat heavier to exterior, faint offsetting to title page, text block split between pages 10 and 11. Owner signature "Renier" to verso of frontispiece, small ink "5" to upper outside corner of title page, owner initials "AR" to upper inside corner of last page. A rare copy. $350.

* A fascinating and remarkably rare piece of early 19th-century street literature capturing a classic "Crim. Con." (Criminal Conversation) trial. In Regency England, a husband could sue his wife's lover for damages based on the loss of her "society and comfort"-effectively treating a wife as a piece of stolen property. These trials provided the era's most reliable scandals, and enterprising publishers like John Fairburn rushed shorthand transcripts into print to satisfy the public's appetite for voyeuristic melodrama.

This specific case captures a classic downstairs scandal: Joseph Fowler, an attorney, discovered that his clerk, Charles Hodgson, was carrying on an affair with Mrs. Fowler. Though Fowler sued for substantial damages, the court largely agreed that Mrs. Fowler was the aggressive instigator. Lord Chief Justice Mansfield subsequently declined to award a large sum, granting Fowler a modest and rather humiliating £150.

* Only edition. "Isaac Smith Kalloch, accused of adultery in this prosecution, was a Baptist clergyman and was supported by the trustees of his church throughout this affair. (...) The jury could not reach a verdict in the case, which was tried in the Massachusetts Court of Common Pleas (Criminal Session) in Cambridge Massachusetts" (Cohen). Kalloch was defended by the eminent lawyer and politician Richard Henry Dana, Jr. [1815-1882]. The Full Report includes the judge's charge, but not the jury's final verdict.

Kalloch moved to San Francisco, where he continued to generate controversy by skirting the bounds of decency. When he decided to run for mayor of San Francisco in 1879, he came under attack from the San Francisco Chronicle's editor-in-chief, Charles de Young, who was backing another candidate. DeYoung, hoping to end Kalloch's campaign, accused the minister of having an affair. Kalloch responded by claiming that De Young's mother ran a brothel. In response, DeYoung ambushed Kalloch on a street and shot him twice. Kalloch survived the wounds. Due in part to the sympathy of voters, he was elected the 18th Mayor of San Francisco. A remarkably well-preserved folio. $500.

* First edition, one of three from the same year. A classic 18th-century tale of 'Town Gallantry' turned deadly. This pamphlet details the sensational fall of Richard Noble, an attorney who transitioned from representing Mrs. Sayer in her separation to becoming her lover and, ultimately, her husband's murderer.

When the aggrieved John Sayer arrived with constables to arrest his runaway wife and serve Noble with an action for 'Criminal Conversation' (adultery), Noble drew his sword and killed Sayer in cold blood in the presence of the officers. The trial highlights the scandalous dynamics of the era: Noble's defense was funded by his mistress and her mother, who were themselves tried as accomplices. While the women used their wealth to secure acquittals, Noble was sent to the gallows. A vivid primary source for the study of 18th-century marital law, adultery, and homicide.

The criminal conversation occurred in 1808 when Paget eloped with Lady Augusta Fane, then the wife of John Parker [1772-1840], 2nd Baron Boringdon (or Borringdon). Paget married her the following year, two days after her divorce was granted. The Walter Scott who owned this copy was not the Scottish author.

Fernand Gabriel and Anne Renier were important collectors of popular printed material. OCLC locates 1 copy (Harvard). No copies listed on Library Hub. Cohn, George Cruikshank: A Catalogue Raisonné 85.

He Seduced Her to Win a Bet: The Trial of the Bold Bad Baronet Sir John Piers

27. [Trial].

Piers, Sir John [1772-1845], Defendant.

The Trial of Sir John Piers, Bart. For Criminal Conversation with Eliza, the Wife of Valentine Viscount Cloncurry Before Lord Chief-Justice Downes, In the Court of King's Bench, Dublin; On February 19, 20, 1807. With the Letters Between the Parties. London: Printed for and Sold by R. Butters, [1807].

Only edition. Octavo (8-1/4" x 5-1/4"; 21 x 13.3cm). 44 pp. Modern period-style quarter morocco over marbled boards, gilt titles and ornaments to spine, renewed endpapers. Lacking the portrait frontispiece. Moderate toning to text, light foxing to a few leaves. Edgewear and a few minor puncture holes to the title page not affecting text; early ink numeral "2" to upper margin of title page. A very good copy of a scarce trial record. $450.

* Scarce London edition detailing one of the most notorious Regency-era adultery trials. Piers, 6th Baronet of Tristernagh Abbey, was an Anglo-Irish aristocrat and a notorious rake. His infamy was cemented during this 1807 "criminal conversation" (adultery) trial, which revealed that he had intentionally seduced Elizabeth Georgiana, Lady Cloncurry, the wife of his close school friend and creditor, Lord Cloncurry, solely to win a wager.

The jury awarded Lord Cloncurry an astonishing £20,000 in damages, bankrupting Piers and forcing him to flee to the Isle of Man to avoid payment. This massive award stood as a landmark sum for a matrimonial civil tort case during the era. The salacious trial captivated the public imagination and left an enduring cultural legacy: it inspired John Betjeman's rare, privately printed 1937 poem Sir John Piers and was later featured in a 1978 BBC documentary, The Bold Bad Baronet.

COPAC locates 1 copy (National Library of Scotland). OCLC locates 5 copies, 3 in North America (Temple University, University of Missouri-Columbia, Yale Law School). Not in the British Museum Catalogue.

* Signed in print by the plaintiff, Charles Sturt, at the conclusion of the preface. This sensational pamphlet details the high-society affair between George Spencer-Churchill, then Marquis of Blandford (later the 5th Duke of Marlborough), and Lady Mary Ann Sturt (née Ashley-Cooper, daughter of the 4th Earl of Shaftesbury).

Charles Sturt, a former Member of Parliament known for his own highly public infidelities, brought a civil suit against the Marquis for the exorbitant sum of £20,000. He claimed the Marquis's conduct represented a "singular instance of perfidy and depravity." While Lord Kenyon explicitly noted that Sturt's own continuous adultery legally precluded him from recovering substantial damages, the special jury compromised by awarding a nominal judgment of one hundred pounds. The included appendix contains highly personal, non-trial correspondence leaked to vindicate Sturt's anger.

OCLC locates 8 copies of this edition, 4 in North America (New York Public Library, George Washington Law School, University of Georgia Law School, Harvard Law School).

Contemporary mottled calf, gilt frames to boards, lettering piece and gilt ornaments to spine, gilt rules to board edges, edges of text block speckled, marbled endpapers, silk ribbon bookmark. Light rubbing to exterior, front joint cracked, corners lightly bumped. Moderate toning to interior, occasional light foxing, faint offsetting from plates in first work. A handsome volume. $3,500.

* Compiled by a contemporary reader, this volume gathers four scarce works providing accounts of trials for adultery. Primarily intended to amuse and titillate, these accounts are still of value to legal scholars and historians for their accurate reports and vivid background histories. Together, they constitute a fascinating document of English attitudes toward adultery and divorce at the end of the early modern period.

The New Collection of Trials for Adultery was first issued in four volumes in 1796 as A New and Complete Collection of Trials for Adultery. A second volume was added to the 1799 edition in 1802 and the ESTC considers it a two-volume work, but the 1799 volume is complete in itself and considered bibliographically distinct in other records. It is unclear how many plates the 1799 edition had, and it may have been issued in parts or in variant states. We found records of copies with as few as three and as many as fifteen plates (our copy has twelve).

The Newton trial had a second part published later in 1782, which is advertised as forthcoming at the end of our copy.

New Collection: English Short-Title Catalogue T106036. Campbell: Not in the ESTC or British Museum Catalogue. * Second, expanded edition. Hickes was a bishop of the nonjuring Church of England in Scotland. A work on propaganda commissioned by his superior in Scotland, John Maitland, Duke of Lauderdale, Ravillac Redivivus is an account of the trial of the Scots-nationalist Presbyterian (Covenanter) James Mitchell [d.1678] for an attempt to assassinate James Sharpe, the archbishop of St Andrews. Hickes linked Mitchell's story to that of the notorious covenanter Major Thomas Weir [c. 1600-1670], a suspected sorcerer who was executed for bestiality and incest in 1670, in order to demonstrate that fanatical dissenters violated the boundaries of moral law and were capable of committing the most outrageous crimes in the name of religion. First published in 1678, the work was reprinted in Dublin in 1679, followed by our second edition. A manuscript annotation at the foot of the title page, which identifies the author, reads: "The author calls himself a Scots Advocate: (p. 46). I rather think him an English Man, probably Dr. Hicks, at that time Chaplane to the Duke of Lauderdale."

"The Spirit of Fanaticism" 1710 Anti-Presbyterian Propaganda Pamphlet on the Scandalous Trials of James Mitchell and Major Thomas Weir

32. [Trials].

[Hickes, George (1642-1715)].

The Spirit of Fanaticism: Exemplify'd in the Tryals of Mr. James Mitchel (A Presbyterian Minister, Who was Hang'd at Edinburgh, For an Attempt Made Upon the Archbishop of St. Andrews.) And Major Thomas Weir (A Gifted Brother at the Knack of Extempore Prayer) Who was Burnt Between Edinburgh and Leith April the 11th, 1670. For Adultery, Bestiality with a Mare and a Cow, And Incest with His Own Sister, Who was Likewise Hang'd the Next Day After Him. To Which is Added an Account of the Original of Presbytery in Scotland, And Their Behaviour Towards the Episcopal Clergy; Wherein is Demonstrated that Rebellion has Ever Been the Principal Article of Their Faith. Written by an Advocate of the Civil Law in Scotland. London: Printed for E. Curll, 1710.

Octavo (8-1/2" x 5-1/4"). [ii], 62 pp. Stab-stitched pamphlet in self-wrappers, untrimmed edges, light soiling to exterior, some wear and chipping along sewn edges of a few leaves, moderate toning to interior, signature F (pp.33-40) laid in, rather than sewn in, due to a binding error, a few brief markings in early hand to title page. $650.

* Second and final edition. Hickes was a bishop of the nonjuring Church of England in Scotland. A work on propaganda commissioned by his superior in Scotland, John Maitland, Duke of Lauderdale, it was first published in 1678 with the title Ravillac Redivivus. It is an account of the trial of the Scots-nationalist Presbyterian (Covenanter) James Mitchell [d.1678] for an attempt to assassinate James Sharpe, the archbishop of St Andrews. Hickes linked Mitchell's story to that of the notorious covenanter Major Thomas Weir [c.1600-1670], a suspected sorcerer who was executed for bestiality and incest in 1670, in order to demonstrate that dissenters violated the boundaries of moral law and were thus capable of committing the most outrageous crimes in the name of religion.

A notorious Grub-Street publisher and committed Whig, Curll [c.1675-1747] specialized in salacious and otherwise offensive material. His republication of Ravillac was likely a barb aimed at the recently established Tory government; Whigs often associated Tories with Scottish Jacobites. English Short-Title Catalogue N23932.

Item housed in a quarter morocco clamshell case, raise bands and gilt fillets, title and publication date to spine. A very good copy. $7,500.

* Only edition. A cornerstone in the evolution of women's legal history, this 1777 treatise represents the definitive Enlightenment-era synthesis of gender and the law. While Thomas Edgar's The Lawes Resolutions of Womens Rights (1632) was the first work on the subject, this volume is the first to apply a systematic, modern philosophical approach to the legal status of women. It was issued by the influential publisher J. Johnson, known for his association with radical thinkers and his later patronage of Mary Wollstonecraft, placing this work at the heart of 18th-century intellectual reform. Legal historian Sir William Holdsworth held the text in the highest regard, considering it "the best of the earlier books on the subject" for its clarity and superior organization.

The work is divided into four books: the first addresses personal status, marriage, and the laws governing "pauper" women; the second details the proprietary rights of spinsters, wives, and widows; the third covers criminal law; and the fourth examines the legal position of minors and the parent-child relationship.

The volume concludes with a dramatic and critical account of the Duchess of Kingston's sensational 1776 bigamy trial. This account serves as more than mere high-society scandal; it provides a sophisticated look at the jurisdictional conflicts between Common and Ecclesiastical law. Elizabeth Chudleigh's conviction and subsequent flight to Europe remains one of the era's most famous legal dramas, ensuring this work's lasting significance in both serious jurisprudence and popular history.
